The first room you see upon entering this home in Old Greenwich is the living room, a relatively tight 13 x 17 space that is further constricted by the presence of a grand piano. Every inch was critical for the transformation of this space into its own little jewel box. The owners often entertain guests, but they also spend a lot of time here playing board games with their children. Chairs on casters move around easily to promote versatility and space. Everything is light and delicate so as not to be overbearing. The Venetian plaster ceiling has a carved look and picks up on the embroidered linen draperies. The silk mural was hand-painted in China and designed to scale, and the bookcase and Niermann Weeks sideboard were each made shallower to promulgate balance and symmetry. ■
